Tip from The Pro: Escaping the Bunker

When golfers enter a bunker to hit a shot, sometimes the nerves can take over. Negative thoughts can creep in, the player forgets what they are trying to accomplish and a few swings later, they are putting for a double or triple bogey. More times than not, the setup can be the cause of these issues. The golf swing is hard enough and if you can get the setup correct before there are any moving parts, there is a greater likelihood for success.

There are a few key areas that we need to focus on in order to advance the ball out of the bunker. We can start by gripping the club with the face open. This will add loft and will help the club glide through the sand. We also want to make sure that we are playing the ball in the front of our stance. The ball should almost line up with your front foot. Forward ball placement will allow the player to hit the sand first a few inches behind the ball. It is also important to have a good foundation and you will want to dig your feet into the sand a little bit to make sure you are stable. With this set-up, there should also be slightly more weight on your lead foot. Now that we have a solid set-up, we need to make sure that we have speed throughout the swing. If these set-up guidelines are followed and practiced, the fear will disappear.
